

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

The current draw of a pump driven by an electric motor, especially a centrifugal pump such as a heating-system circulating pump, is measured by detecting the voltage drop across a conductor segment connecting the power side and hence the power line to the motor control circuit. This eliminates the need for a separate measurement resistor.

ef-